Forgotten Books, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: French . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from La Civilisation Assyro-Babylonienne Tout le territoire compris entre Kornah et la mer est une acquisition due au limon que déposent les fleuves; c est peu a peu, au cours des siecles, qu il s est constitue. Nous en sommes assures par les Observations des voyageurs qui confirment que le phenomene continue a s accomplir. L explorateur Loftus, au milieu du xixe siecle, estimait le progres de l alluvion a 1.600 metres pour 70 ans; H. Rawlinson donne un chiffre double pour l antiquite. Le geographe Kiepert pense, qu au vie siecle avant notre ere, le rivage s etendait a 80 kilometres environ plus haut qu aujourd hui, et G. Rawlinson calcule que, vers le milieu du troisieme millenaire, le rivage etait a 190 kilometres de celui d aujourd hui, soit au Nord du village de Kornah. C est ce qui explique qu on trouve en plein desert les ruines des villes anciennes que les traditions et les textes nous assurent s etre developpees pres de la mer, telles qu eridu, Lagash, Nippur. Ce lent ensablement fut une des causes du declin de ces Villes primitives, devenues incapables de deployer l effort necessaire pour compenser le dommage cause par le recul des flots qui les faisaient vivre; a l epoque moderne nous connaissons des exemples de ces decadences pour des villes comme Bruges et Ravenne, autrefois prosperes quand la mer ne s en etait pas retiree.
