Excerpt from The Southern Planter, Vol. 17: Devoted to Agriculture, Horticulture, and the Household Arts; May, 1857 The superphosphate of lime is a compound of lime and phosphoric acid which is soluble, and contains more phosphoric acid in proportion to the lime, than is found in the neutral or bone phosphate; it may be regarded as a compound of neutral phosphate, with free, or uncombined phosphoric acid, in which the neutral phosphate is soluble, just as it is in muriatic acid. Whenever this compound comes in contact with the various bases, such as lime, potash, etc., which are present in every fertile soil, whether naturally or by the addition of these bases to it, the free phosphoric acid unites with one or more of them, when the neutral phosphate is precipitated, and becomes insoluble phosphate of lime. But as it is in the form of a precipitated phosphate, it is in a condition to be acted upon by the ordinary solvents of the soil. The free acid, by its union with the bases, forms phosphates which are also in a fine state of division: if it meets with lime and magnesia, insoluble salts result - if with the alkalies, soluble phosphates are formed. It is impossible that the superphosphate, unless applied to a sandy waste, should continue for any length of time in the soil as such; neutral phosphates are formed, but these, although for the most part insoluble in water, are readily acted upon by the solvents in the soil, and are consequently immediately available to growing crops. This fact first led Liebig to suggest the use of the superphosphate, and it is...
