Original publisher: Bethesda, Md. : The Institute, 2002 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)50258088 Subject: Affective disorders -- Research. Excerpt: . . . development of the plan. But many other persons are equally critical: educators who play a vital role in training young scientists in the techniques and nuances of research relevant to mood disorders; researchers and communicators whose primary responsibility is to disseminate the knowledge generated through research; and clinicians and other health and social service professionals who apply the products of research in diverse settings. Challenges in two particular arenas - training tomorrows researchers and putting the fruits of research in the hands of public health practitioners, clinicians, and members of the general public - cross-cut the entire strategic planning process. Absent a solid foundation in these areas, even the most innovative scientific agenda becomes a sterile exercise. In compiling this final document, NIMH staff culled from the workgroup reports an array of implicit and explicit recommendations for research training that encompass disciplinary as well as demographic gaps in the contemporary research community and, importantly, that anticipate the impact of future scientific advances and shifts in the Nations age and racial cultural composition in the years ahead. A second category of needs and opportunities involves educating front-line clinicians and the public-at-large about mood disorders, using a mix of media and language and formats that will be broadly accessible. An example of a more specific educational challenge is that of informing interested individuals - clinicians as well as patients - how to learn about and participate in clinical services and prevention trials. Selected Research Priorities and Objectives: Expanding and Strengthening the Research Foundation Opportunities to Expand and Strengthen the Research Foundation in Training Address the shortage of new...
