Springer. Paperback. Condition: New. 258 pages. Dimensions: 9.2in. x 6.1in. x 0.6in. According to Askin and Standridge, the purpose of manufacturing, at least idealistically, is to enrich society through the production of functionally desirable, aesthetically pleasing, environmentally safe, economically affordable, highly reliable, top-quality products AS93. A less pointed and more pragmatic description of manufacturing purposes is to satisfy customers demand (function, reliability, quality of products) while considering managements objectives (minimum of costs). In this context, the organization of manufacturing systems...
