Excerpt from Songs in the Night: A Sermon, Preached at the Funeral of Mrs. Eliza Whitney Brown, Wife of Rev. Nathan Brown, Late Missionary to in Charlemont, May 17, 1871 For the world has its night. It seems necessary that it should. The sun shineth by day and men go forth to their labors. But they grow weary and worn, and nightfall cometh on like a sweet boon from heaven. Men and animals need the repose, which is favored by the silence and darkness of the night. As the shadows of the evening deepen, birds hie to their perch animals to their inclosures or lairs - all, save those who make the darkness a cover to their search for prey - and men betake themselves to their homes and places of rest.
