Not illustrated. 1852 Excerpt: . up with the insults of warlike and turbulent prelates, such as Gustavus Trolle, who had threatened to use sharper weapons against Sten Sture than book and candle. The Regent could support only 500 soldiers from the resources of the state, because the Crown and nobles had only a third part of the landed property, while Chap. VII. HIS ADDRESS TO THE STATES. 149 priests or monks, churches or convents, had all the rest. He confessed that he permitted the preaching of God s word and gospel, and some of the preachers were here ready to defend their doctrine; the prelates of the Church, however, would not listen to them, but relied upon ancient custom, right or wrong. It was falsely and shamelessly said of him that he wanted no priests in the country; he hoped to die a Christian; he knew that teachers could not...
