THE ONTOLOGICAL I OTHER ESSAYS

Streisguth / Martin, United States, 2012. Paperback. Book Condition: New. Steve Streisguth (illustrator). 203 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Know Thyself! is the theme most central to the task of this book. These essays came about from the author being a student of philosophy and, as a student, learning how to philosophize. The title essay of this volume is the longest. It consists of six parts, or Studies, and deals primarily with a theory of personal identity that is ethically grounded. In some ways, it argues that ethics is the first philosophy. Emmanuel Levinas, Albert Camus, and Luce Irigaray are the primary influences on this essay, but the work of Paul Ricoeur cannot be ignored as important to the overall understanding of the work. The general thesis is that Otherness forms the ground of my identity, to the extent that I am Other to myself, and that this aspect of my own Otherness is precisely the ground on which self-consciousness becomes possible. Ethical implications spring from the very roots of this thesis and are acknowledged throughout the essay as being of central importance to any plausible theory of the human person. The brief Interlude is a meditation and exercise in free writing based on the work of Nietzsche. It uses Nietzsche's Untimely Meditations as a foil for a series of aphorisms that are themselves the subject of a subsequent analysis. This literary exercise forms a key example of the philosopher struggling to know himself before the public eye and through the medium of his own philosophical writings. The second longest essay of the current work follows the Interlude. The essay The Freedom of Action deals primarily with an argument for how the Self, as detailed in The Ontological I, is...
